NTS, Year Book 1971, 14 — "In 1958 the Treasury asked if the Trust would accept Brodick Castle and associated chattels, should these be accepted in lieu of Estate Duty by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The Trust launched a public appeal for £10,000; its success made acceptance possible. Lady Jean Fforde, daughter of Mary, Duchess of Montrose, added a gift of 7,300 acres of mountainous country including Goatfell."

NTS, Year Book 1971, 42 — "Forestry. After the most careful consideration of policy for the Brodick Castle and Balmacara estates it was decided to dispose of the woodlands and a proportion of unplanted land to the Forestry Commission, having obtained an assurance in both instances of the Commission's intention to maintain the high standards of landscaping to which the Trust has adhered over 20 years.

"The planting plan for Brodick was prepared by Miss Sylvia Crowe, PPILA, the Commission's consultant, who discussed it on the spot with Major Michael Crichton Stuart[1]. It provides for the use of a diversity of species in irregular formations.

"The finances of Brodick have given cause for concern for some time, the revenue from the Endowment Fund being insufficient to meet outgoings. Part of the deficit has been offset by an Annual Maintenance Grant of £3,000 from H.M. Government, but we have been exhorted by the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland to examine the situation very closely and try to achieve stability. The money received from the Forestry Commission will be applied to the Brodick Endowment Fund."
