Anon, Burns in Irvine, 1 Reopened after restoration by IDC, 20th January 1984.

TT, F 24.3.1899, 5c Irvine antiquarian Henry Downs has acquired the heckles, combs, &c., alleged to have been used by Burns. "The house in which they have been kept for nearly a century was occupied at the end of the last century by a Dr Comyn or Cummin who, it is stated, started his nephew in partnership with the poet."

AA 17.9.1925 Burns' lodging in Glasgow Vennel gutted by fire last Sunday.

Burns and Cunninghame [STB leaflet] ... a memorial plaque erected by Irvine Burns Club in 1926.

Sam Gaw, The Glasgow Vennel - A Living Working Memorial, in Burns Chronicle, 4th series, no.9, Kilmarnock, Burns Federation, 1985, 92

The statue of Burns, unveiled on Irvine Muir in 1896, depicts a thick-set figure with enigmatic expression looking towards the centre of the old Royal Burgh: the "Poet of the People" standing in a solitary plinth wistfully yearning for the noise, bustle, the bacchanalia of the seaport he knew. January 1984 saw in that town a memorial unveiled, doubtless dearer to his heart, a living memorial; one where people eat, sleep, indulge in the labours, pleasures and vicissitudes of life and all, even today, touched by that aura of his passing. The Glasgow Vennel, or Smiddy Brae as the poet would better know it, lovingly restored, recreated the atmosphere not only of the Flax Dressing Shop where he slaved, and his lodgings kept by his rascally partner and half-uncle Wm Peacock, but recalls an era in Scotland's story, the crucible that formed the poet.

That cobbled 18th century street reminds us of the Provost in the corner house whose son, medical student and friend later had faith enough to guarantee the Kilmarnock Edition. The building with gable to the street, home of the Burgh Fiscal, captivated by a Glasgow religious maniac of a woman, convinced of the second coming of the Lord and her passport to heaven. He, she and their flock never saw Heaven unless being drummed out of Irvine in 1784 counted as such an incident. But their departure was recalled by the poet when passing on the song Bed of Sweet Roses, a "beautiful tune to which the Buchanites aft sang their Hellish Hymns".

The restored Heckling House incorporates an audio-visual display of heckling, the flaxdressing craft. The actual room where Burns lodged, sleepy and wrote, oft-times in despair and despondency, is being set up, likewise, to be visited - where one can share the atmosphere foreign to that young countryman. The Vennel itself, through which all goods from the Port were conveyed by pack horse the 25 miles to Glasgow, the 65,000 tons a year of coal bound from the Burgh's pits to Ireland, the linens and fine embroidered garments vying with the prolific if clandestine cargoes, mainly of grain, sometimes of Cognac, formed another major industry - the Smuggling Trade.

This may be EAGLE INN:

ASH, Sa 9.8.1862, 1c — Eagle Inn, opposite Town Buildings, p.p. by Mrs Templeton to sell. One of the oldest licensed houses in Irvine.

AP, F 20.1.1933, 15b — An interesting relic of old smuggling days in Ayrshire was unearthed on Saturday by tradesmen who were demolishing a very old building at the rear of the Grosvenor in High Street, Irvine. In a recess built into the thick wall of the building they found a whisky still from which the copper worm had been removed. The still was a small one, the pot resembling an old-fashioned three-legged pot of very large size and bearing obvious signs of great age. It was also obvious that the building of the still into its concealed position had been carried out by expert tradesmen. The cavity containing the still was below the floor level. It was shut in by a stone flag of the same type as those of the surrounding masonry, and no trace of the work was visible above the stone flooring. The flue was evidently led into a built chimney of the property which rises from the outer edge of the cavity. Until shortly before the War the Grosvenor was named the Eagle Inn. With the passing of a 'limitation' resolution in Irvine about 10 years ago the licence for the property was withdrawn, and it converted into a restaurant.

List 20 — dated 1856 - An imposing Italianate facade, ashalr, raised quoins and dressings, heavy oversailing eaves; 3 storeys; 3 centre windows grouped. B. [Has Peddie & Kinnear, Edinburgh, monogram]

ASH 27.3.1858 — The new massive looking building belonging to the Royal Bank has been opened, which for chastity of style, richness of design and excellence of workmanship proves quite an ornament.

ASH, Sa 15.2.1868, 8c — Obituary of Walter McLachlan, builder, names him as builder of Royal Bank.

HIGH STREET, 85-93

ACC Planning, A7884 — October 1954. Shop front, 85-93 HS, for Irvine & Fullarton Co-operative Society Ltd.

Prospect 28, Autumn 1986 — Irvine also poses more conventional problems of harmonious infill and gap-site development. At 85-93 High Street in old Irvine, the original buildings were so badly damaged by fire in 1979 that demolition was unavoidable. The redevelopment brief specified commercial space on the ground floor with residential units above. The site is in a Conservation Area in the old commercial heart of Irvine, so a sensitive infill scheme was very important. The picture shows that the result blends in almost seamlessly. The ground floor comproses 230 sq.m. of shopping space in three units, with a commercial service yard at the rear, adjoining an existing carpark and service area, including six parking spaces reserved for the residents of the flats above. Access to the dwellings is through a close at one end of the building leading to the main stair at the rear. A rear door leads to the carpark, bin stores and a drying area. Residential accommodation comprises three flats on the first floor and three maisonettes entered at second floor level with bedrooms in the roofspace. The roofspace not only provides accommodation but is carefully related to the ridge and cornice levels of the buildings on either side.

MONTGOMERY STREET, 83-85, SUN INN

MONTGOMERY STREET, 101, BOOKEND. [also 78 Montgomery Street]

Prospect 28, Autumn 1986 — While not an infill development as such, the problem facing IDC architects at 78 and 101 Montgomery Street was still one of relating the new development to existing buildings with their own strong character. The two new buildings are designed to form visual "end-stops" to the linear development and "raw" ends of Montgomery Street. Each block contains three one-person flats. The buildings are viewed from an unusually wide angle and respond to this by use of the 45º splayed gable. The buildings have their own visual identity and add to the rich mixtures of styles, colours and surfaces present in the street.

George Wren — Job architect: William Crichton.

MONTGOMERY STREET, 122

SMM leaflet — At the turn of the century, the owner of the sawmill in Montgomery Street created Montgomery Place, a block of three tenement buildings. By 1910 the flats were occupied by a cross-section of waterfront craftsmen and their families, and the SMM has recreated the interior of a ground floor single-end of the period. A restored double-end opposite serves as a Visitor Centre and Education Office.
