FULLARTON HOUSE

Old List 17	Present mansion house built by William Fullarton 1745 bears considerable resemblance to the work of William and Robert Adam; ornamental pavilions either side of main entrance similar to those at Auchinleck ... internally the house has been adapted as flats; the plan altered; one room upstairs has an C18 coved ceiling of some merit, ornamented plaster swags and trophies. Historic interest: Louis Philippe, afterwards King of the French, occupied Fullarton in 1801. Ref: Millar. B.
NMRS, AYD/68	Adam plans of 1790, copied from the Soane Museum. Copies herewith.
Lost Houses	Fullarton was built in 1745 by William Fullarton with additions made by his son. The Adam brothers made an unexecuted design for the house, dated 1790, but the actual architect is unknown. Millar said that in 1805 Fullarton came into the possession of the 3rd Duke of Portland who made extensive alterations. Wings were added and the whole plan was altered. The approach was reconstructed so what was the back of the house became the front to make the principal windows look towards the Firth of Clyde and Isle of Arran. The house, together with the castellated stable block built in 1790 and attributed to Robert Adam, were demolished in 1966.
