TEMPLEHILL

FULLARTON'S TEMPLE

nr — A small classical summer-house erected by Colonel (William) Fullarton. Inscription: Bacho laetitiae datori, amacis et otio sacrum - "Erected to Bacchus the giver of happiness for friends and for leisure". William Fullarton was b.1754, succ 1759, and d.1808. He wrote the first General view of Agriculture of Ayrshire.

1767 account, from Customs Records, and quoted in Wilkins, p.56 — The Collector was determined to get access to the 'pleasure house or temple' on Troon Point so that they could station some officers there - to put an end to the smuggling. This was easier said than done. When they went to collect the keys from Mrs Fullarton on 20.4.1767, they discovered she was in London, and that none of her staff knew, or were prepared to admit to knowing, where the keys were kept. Undaunted the Collector went to make an external inspection of the pleasure house, where he reckoned "10 persons at most might be quartered .."

1SA, VI, 179 — Erected on the Troon by late Mr Fullarton, "a gentleman of classic tastes". Commands a prospect.

ASH, Sa 30.12.1876, 3f — The writer of this article refers to the poor reference to it in Kirkwood, and to the 1SA reference. Quotes poem from the Scots Magazine of 1765 on its decayed state (see ASH files for full poem).
Built by William Fullarton †1759: at his death the estate passed to his son, later Colonel William, who was born 12.1.1754, and thus a minor. This would account for lack of interest in the temple in 1765. The 1SA suggests it is in good repair. Date of demolition not known.
