ELLERSLIE [Not in 1892-93 VR]
What's Old, (Newsletter of the West of Scotland Archaeology Service), 3, Spring 1999
Dr [Fiona] Watson has now concluded that Sir William Wallace was the son of Alan Wallace, a crown tenant in Ayrshire, and that although the Wallaces held the lands of Elderslie in Rebfrewshire as part of the barony of Riccarton from at least the later C14, there is currently no evidence for them having the land before that date.
There have long been arguments about where in the west of Scotland Elderslie or Ellerslie, reputedly the birthplace of the great Scottish patriot, may be. Just to add a bit more confusion Dr Watson discovered that transcriptions of the now lost notebooks of the early map maker Timothy Pont, who compiled manuscript maps of Ayrshire during the 1590s, refer to an Ellerslie somewhere near Kilmarnock. The exact location of this Ellerslie is not known. Pont's manuscripts have not survived, and although the first edition OS map of the area has an Ellerslie near Crosshouse on the north side of the River Irvine, Pont's notebook entries suggest his Ellerslie lay on the south side.
[Marked on OS to SE of Crosshouse, close to Kilmaurs/Kilmarnock boundary, and on site, roughtly, of Annandale Brickworks.]
