SMITHFIELD, 435274
AP, F 2.1.1948, 4cd		Any intelligent villager can explain that this particular name is in no way associated with Tarbolton. Only in the first half of the last century does it make its appearance, the explanation being that some individual who had made considerable wealth in Tobago Island and later been successfully concerned with the London meat market came to reside here, built his farm, and called it Smithfield. It is worthy of note that some of the masonry used for building this steading came from the adjacent and much more historic steading of 'Gedshall', occupied in his day by John Rodgers, immortalised by the national bard in 'Death and Doctor Hornbook'.
Paterson, 1863, vol I, 775		Built shortly after the property was acquired (1798) by Robert Paterson, †1843. He named it Smithfield. Land previously belonged to Enterkine estate.
